

Alice Springs Airport

Sky's the limit

Alice Springs Airport is now the only Australian airport to have a large-scale solar energy plant feeding back to its electricity grid.

This achievement came last September when the airport's solar power station was officially switched on.

The initiative, part of the Alice Springs Solar City project, means that at peak output the solar power station provides around 28% of the airport's average daily energy needs.

